Examination and Selection Policy

Applicants will be selected based on the oral examination and English proficiency rating.

- The oral examination is to assess whether the applicant has the determination, imagination, and judgment required to study their subject of research, as well as technical knowledge of the field of research in the applicant’s graduation course or intended field of study in the Graduate School of Frontier Biosciences.
- It does not require the same level of comprehensive knowledge as a general written test. English proficiency will be assessed using your TOEFL, TOEIC, or IELTS score. Please note that we cannot accept applications from candidates whose score does not meet the minimum thresholds given below.

Standard Duration of Course and Eligibility to Graduate

- Standard Duration

  The standard duration of the course is five years. You may not be enrolled for a cumulative period of more than seven years. However, the period of enrollment does not include periods when you are on a leave of absence (up to a maximum of five years).

- Completion Criteria

  In order to be awarded a PhD, you must have been enrolled for at least five years (up to seven years), have acquired 40 credits or more in required classes and, having received the requisite research supervision, passed the final examination. A path to expedited graduation from the PhD course is open to those who have an outstanding research record. Those who meet the requirements and pass the interim examination will be awarded a master's degree. You may select the title of the degree in Japanese from “学術”, “生命機能学”, “理学” and “工学”, and “Doctor of Philosophy” in English.
